

We have made lots of progress with our development and backend coding of the Foodbuk app. After some trial and error, Foodbuk has evolved into a search engine concept, rather than a database. Users can input the ingredients that they have in their kitchen in a search engine format and the app will generate websites that closely match their search. For now, we have predominately linked Turkish websites and are in the Turkish language. Version 1.0 will be launched this month.